VOL. IV. NO. 132. THE PAPER THAT PRINTS THE NEWS SATURDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 1, 1913 THE PAPER THAT EVERYBODY READS TWO CENTS

Cannot Move Body of Love for a Year

Mrs. Flora Love Informed by State Department That Laws of Abyssinia Prohibit Removal of Son's Remains at This Time—No Further Details of Death Received

That the body of her son, Guy R. Love, formerly United States vice and deputy consul general at Adis Ababa, Abyssinia, who died at his post in that far away country on January 9, can not be removed to the United States until a year after his death is the sad intelligence received by Mrs. Flora Love of Chestnut street from the state department at Washington, D. C.

The government message brought Mrs. Love no further news concerning her son's death and she continues to know little if anything concerning the details of his demise.

Suffered From Rheumatism

It will be remembered that one week after she had received the news of her son's death Mrs. Love received a letter written by Mr. Love, himself, several weeks before, stating that he was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism but that he expected to recover in a short time. This, with the brief message of his death and the other later message stating that his body can not be removed for a year under the laws of Abyssinia (both messages coming through the state department at Washington) is the only information which has reached the bereaved mother here in Coshocton.

Gangrenous Appendicitis Operation

Hannah, the eleven-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stiner, of Pleasant Valley, underwent an operation for gangrenous appendicitis at the City hospital Friday evening. Drs. Shaw, Pomerene and Marshall performed the operation.

About six months ago the child was operated upon by Dr. Shaw for the removal of tonsils and adenoids.

Her condition was reported to be critical at a late hour Friday night.

Thieves Steal Roof from House

Chicago, Jan. 31—Of all the odd booty of thieves shown in the police records, the most curious was reported today, when K. A. Williams, who lives alone and works at night, complained that thieves had stolen the roof of his house.

"If it rains or snows today my furniture will be ruined," sighed Williams.

Williams' house is a one-room affair on which he had just renewed the roof. The new timber evidently was regarded as valuable by the thieves.

Buys Team for Street Flusher

George S. Caton, director of public service, purchased a big team of white horses at the sale held at the fair grounds Friday afternoon.

The team will be used on the new street flusher, appropriation for which was allowed by the city council.

Street Commissioner John Gross took charge of the team.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl N. Johnson, of West Lafayette are visiting relatives in this city.

Insurance Adjusters Unable to Agree on Loss

Mr. Stone of Cleveland, representing the Western Adjusting Company and Mr. Collins of Zanesville representing Pentel Bros., confectioners, who recently sustained a heavy loss when their store located in the McDowell building on Main street was gutted by fire, were in the city yesterday adjusting the loss but were unable to reach an agreement. Because of this fact Mr. Sharp of Zanesville has been appointed umpire and will confer with the representatives of the Adjusting Company and Pentel Bros. in regard to the settlement.

Local Insurance agencies interested in the adjustment are the Baker-Herbig-Royer Company, The Gray Insurance Agency Co., Glenn O. Boyd's agency, the Le-Reuilley agency and the McConnell & Karr agencies.

New License Bill Is Opposed by Autoists

A bill providing for a $20 license for automobiles of 50 h. p. or less and for a $30 license for machines of more than 50 h. p. which has been introduced in the legislature is attracting the attention of local automobile owners.

At present all automobiles are licensed at $5 per year regardless of their horsepower.

Oppcsed by Autoists

It is understood that automobilists generally are opposing the passage of the bill unless it may be made to provide for the licensing of all vehicles. Several Coshocton autoists interviewed concerning that matter state that the bill would be unjust unless the above provision is made, since heavily loaded wagons and other vehicles are responsible for a large portion of the wear on the roads.

Two Sides of Question

Interviews bring out the fact that automobilists think the man with the horse and wagon should pay his share of the tax while the man with the horse and wagon thinks that the demanding automobilists should pay well for his privileges. Each asks that the legislature consider well both sides of the question.

Will Open Novel Shop in This City

Mont Bodenheimer Will Refinish Furniture in New Establishment

Beginning Monday, February 3 Mont Bodenheimer, for the past several years employed as polisher and finisher at the Compton-Price Piano company's plant, will open a new shop on Ash street where he expects to do all kinds of refinishing of household and office furniture. Mr. Bodenheimer has resigned his position with the Piano company. His success during the past assures him a promising future in his independent business enterprise.

"Watch Us Grow"

For the present the work will all be done by Mr. Bodenheimer himself in the work room which he has leased on the Shaw property on Ash street near South Lawn avenue. Later, as the business enlarges, it is probable that other skilled workmen will be employed to assist with the work.

Opening for Business

Mr. Bodenheimer has had experience in finishing wood both with a high polish and also with what is known as "the satin finish." The kind of work which he proposes to introduce with his new enterprise has heretofore been a "missing quantity" in Coshocton's business enterprises, work of this sort having been confined chiefly to the piano factory where wood finishing was done only for pianos and no outside contracts were taken. That there is an opening for Mr. Bodenheimer's enterprise and that he will be successful in his venture is considered an assured fact by those familiar with the demand for such a business in Coshocton.

Body of Rottman Is Found

The body of Earl Rottman, aged 19, who was drowned in Killbuck creek near Millersburg, January 13, was found along the banks of the stream late Thursday afternoon by a party of searchers.

It will be remembered that the young man left his home in Millersburg to hunt muskrats in the creek, the waters of which were swollen. He told the members of the family that he would return in the afternoon.

It is the theory that his boat, which was a frail craft, sank while in midstream and the young man was unable to reach the shore.

Searching parties lined the banks of the stream without results until Thursday except an oar which had been used to propel the illfated boat.

To Arraign North Today

William North, of the Conesville vicinity, will be arraigned before Squire Wimmer today on a charge of non-support filed by his wife.

North was placed under arrest Monday afternoon and retained Attorney J. C. Adams to defend him. He was released upon his own recognizance and promised to appear today. The warrant charges that he has failed to support his two children Selma and Oneta, both of whom are under the age of 16.

BIG FUR SHIPMENT

The Coshocton Fur Company made a large shipment of furs to the eastern market yesterday afternoon on No. 6. The shipment was valued at $12,000 and consisted of 33 bags or 4,000 pounds of pelts, as follows:

2700 skunks, 220 raccoon, 900 opossum, 2600 muskrats, 95 mink, 13 red fox, 18 house cats.

Snake Mistakes January for July

Alphonso Wright is Coshocton county's first "snake-killer" for 1913. He encountered a viper in Davis Hollow Friday and since the reptile had evidently mistaken January 31 for the warm days of early spring, Wright brought a summary end to its delusion.

Fair Prices Realized at Horse Sale

The one hundred horses, sold Friday at the Coshocton Horse & Mule Company's sale at the fair grounds, brought fair prices. The sale was brisk and the demand was evidently good. The company will hold another sale in two weeks.

Some of the principal foreign buyers who attended the sale yesterday were Paul Connelley of Philadelphia, Pa.; O. S. Cramblett of Tappan, Ohio; Charles McGonigal of Pittsburg, Louis Sax of Wheeling, W. Va.; Frank Latham of Freeport; Judge Binfer of Canal Dover; E. H. Eckert of Canton and L. B. Jones of Dundee.

Signature Reads Same Up-side-down as Right-side-up

W. H. Hill, the monument man from Warsaw, has a system in writing his name which is hard to duplicate. In some manner he arranges his signature so that it will read just as plainly when turned up-side-down as when read right-side-up. The only difference noticeable in the making of his initials is that he puts a dot under the letter "W" which serves for the dot for "I" in Hill, when reversed.

MASS MEET TODAY

All is in readiness for the big mass meeting to be held at the Sixth Street Theatre this afternoon.

Senator William Green and Representative Percy Tetlow of Columbia county, will address the meeting on the Green "Anti-Screen" bill which is before the legislature at the present time.

The bill is one of the most important to be brought before the present session and is being indorsed or condemned in every county in the state.

It will be remembered that the local board of trade opposed the bill and local coal operators stated that they would cease operations in this county in case the bill passed.

The provisions of the measure will be explained in full by its author, William Green.

A special invitation has been extended to the Coshocton Board of Trade to attend the meeting and hear the "other side of the question."

GOOD ROADS PREFERRED TO CANALS

SENATOR WEYGANDT FAVORS SALE OF OHIO WATERWAYS.

Columbus, O., Jan. 31—Appeal for a general consideration of his suggestion that the state dispose of its canals, was made in a public statement issued Friday by Senator William A. Weygandt of Portage county.

The statement holds that the canals are practically useless as public waterways for transportation, and declares that their only real improvement would lie in the direction of big, barge canals, which in turn would mean federal aid.

Senator Weygandt holds the idea of barge canals through federal improvement out of the question, and he maintains that the only logical solution of the question is the general improvement of the public roads through the funds from the sale of the canals, estimating the state might realize $20,000,000.

He would postpone any sale of the canals until the middle of the year 1914 in order to give everybody a chance to bid.

Wheat Boosted to $1.05

The price of wheat was boosted from $1 to $1.05 per bushel in the local market Friday. The quotation has remained stationary at $1 for several months. It is understood that practically no wheat is being marketed in this section at present. This is likely due both to the small amount being held by the farmers and the impassible condition of most of the Coshocton county roads, following the steady rains of the past several weeks.

Adjusting Loss in the Collier Fire

Mr. Foster of Columbus was in the city yesterday adjusting the loss which G. J. Schoenberger the grocer sustained in the fire which broke out in the Collier building at an early hour Wednesday morning. Mr. Schoenberger carried insurance in the Baker-Herbig-Royer agency and also in the H. M. Ewing agency. The stock will be invoiced today and the adjustment will probably be made today or not later than Monday.

William Sure Is Farsighted

Some people can be called farsighted but William Long, well known tonsorial artist, has "it on" most people when it comes to seeing ahead.

Several days ago a friend presented the barber with a raccoon and immediately upon receipt of the gift, a bright thought began to penetrate William's mind.

"I will have it for dinner next Christmas," said he after several moment's deliberation. At present the coon is being fed everything which will tend to make it a desirable Christmas dinner, about eleven months hence.

Skull Fractured by Angry Husband

New Philadelphia Mill worker Finds Wife's Paramour in Home and Sends Him to Hospital

Canal Dover, O., Jan. 31—A New Philadelphia mill worker named Young is in the Union hospital this morning with a fractured skull and fractured jaw, the result of being attacked by an enraged husband in New Philadelphia last midnight.

Young was unconscious most of the night and may not recover.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson living in West Ray street, New Philadelphia are in the New Philadelphia jail. No charges have been preferred against either of them. It is not likely any affidavits will be filed until this afternoon.

It may be, too, that authorities will wait for the outcome of Young's injuries.

Married Short Time

Anderson, who has been married only a short time, is alleged to have found Young with Mrs. Anderson at the latter's home.

What Anderson used to attack Young police do not know. There were no instruments of any kind found in the Anderson home.

Officers Boyles and Balliet arrested Mr. and Mrs. Anderson a few minutes after neighbors reported the affray to the police station. Both took arrest calmly.

Found Unconscious

The doctors found Young, unconscious, lying on the floor of a bedroom in the Anderson home. An ambulance removed him to the hospital.

Authorities are told that Mrs. Anderson's father informed Anderson that Young was with his wife. Anderson quit his work at the rolling mill to catch Young.

Carpenter Falls Heir to Millions

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 31—To find oneself heir to a portion of $15,000,000 of an English legacy after spending the best years of one's life toiling as a carpenter is the experience of John Jewell, aged 46. The estate, when divided, will leave Jewell a millionaire, according to advices received today.

Jewell and his wife and two sons came from Camborne, Cornwall, England, 12 years ago. Not long ago Jewell received news of the death of an uncle, Richard Jewell, in England, and today received word that the uncle's estate will approximate $15,000,000.

Friedman Cure for Dr. Stutz

A great amount of interest is being taken in the new cure for tuberculosis which has been discovered by Dr. Friedman of Berlin, Germany.

Dr. Stutz, of Upper Sandusky, a victim of the dread disease, is the first American to try the cure and he pronounces it little short of miraculous in its powers to cure.

A bit of local interest is connected with the treatment of Dr. Stutz as that physician is a personal friend of Tom O'Donnell, proprietor of the Smoke House in this city.

Mr. O'Donnell and Dr. Stutz were shool mates in the Upper Sandusky high school and played together on the first basket ball team in that city. After leaving school their warm friendship continued but since leaving that city Mr. O'Donnell had not heard from the doctor.

Box of Fine Fruit from Sunny South

Mrs. A. D. Miller of route 3 received a box of delicious fruit, oranges, tangerines and grape fruit from her sister Mrs. O. L. Williams of Philadelphia, who is spending the winter in Indianola, Fla. Mrs. Miller generously divided her gift with the carrier on route 3 who states that he can vouch for the quality of the fruit.

Edward Stewart Is Pneumonia Victim

Edward Stewart, aged 21, died at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stewart two miles southeast of Warsaw at 11 o'clock Friday morning after a nine days' illness of pneumonia. The young man had for some time been a sufferer from tuberculosis and when he was stricken with pneumonia the dread disease was more than his weakened system could combat.

Edward Stewart was born and reared in Coshocton county on the farm where the family were living at the time of his death.

In addition to the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stewart, the following brothers and sisters survive: Mrs. James Sickle of near Helmick, Mrs. Belle Lamma and Charles Stewart of Coshocton, John Stewart of Blooming Grove, Clem, Clyde, Quincy and Daniel of the home.

The funeral cortege will leave the house Sunday morning at 12 o'clock (sun time) and proceed to Blooming Grove church where services will be held in charge of Rev. C. P. Barnes of Warsaw. Interment will take place in the Blooming Grove cemetery.

Korns Released; Sells Is Arrested

Darrell Korns, of Newcomerstown, who is employed at the local Clow plant, has been freed of the charge of burglarizing the Globe hotel at Newcomerstown.

He was arrested in this city by Lieutenant Hankins Thursday night and taken to Newcomerstown to answer to thec harge.

Stolen Quilts Sold

A number of quilts stolen from the hotel were found in the possession of Elza Sells who sold them to a Mrs. Johns, a boarding house keeper in Newcomerstown, stating that he had bought them from Korns. On this statement Korns was placed under arrest.

Clears Korns

When Sells learned that Korns had been placed under arrest he denied that he had come into possession of the bed clothing through Korns but had found the quilts under a porch adjoining the hotel.

Korns was immediately released and Sells placed under arrest. The latter will be arraigned before Mayor Lloyd Murphy of Newcomerstown, Monday afternoon.

The Kappa Sigma Pi team won the basket ball game played against West Lafayette High team at the fair ground auditorium last evening by a score of 20 to 9. There will be a return game at West Lafayette next Friday night. The crowd last night was a large one. The line-up.

Wants Drinking Cup Banished.

Columbus, O., Jan. 31.—The state board of health in a message to the general assembly today advised of the board's action against the general use of the public drinking cup and the roller towel, and asked the assembly by way of good example, to abolish both at once in the halls and adjacent rooms of the house and senate. The house recently proposed action against the roller towels it now uses, but recanted on the objection of some members that extravagance might be complained of by constituents.

Prescott Gray of Adams Mills was in this city Friday attending the horse show.

SHORT SPORTS

Chicago seems to have started something in the fight game. In fact Chicago is usually starting something but the latest stunt is an intercity series of fights. We can look in a short time for regular boxing leagues with season schedules.

The Solomon Derby held at Nome, Alaska, recently for dog teams was won by a team of Siberian wolves, who traveled 65 miles in six hours. It was only 30 degrees below zero, which was considered ideal weather for the meet.

King took second place in the last United States track meet in Celtic park, New York, ranking next to Thorpe so since the barring of the Indian, the South Bend boy assumes first position.

ARTIE STILL ACTING UP

Says Money Can Not Induce Him to Sign Giant Contract

Los Angeles, January 31.—Despite the fact that he has just received a contract from John J. McGraw, manager of the Giants for a large increase in salary, Artie Shafer, utility infielder of the Giants, announced today that he would stick to his determination to quit baseball. This is the second that McGraw has sent to Shafer, Artie having returned the first one unsigned.

"I have positively decided to get out of the game," said Shafer. "McGraw has not enough money in his treasury to tempt to alter my plans. I have had enough of the game, and think that I will tour Europe this year."

Shafer would have been the regular shortstop of the Giants next season if he had accepted the terms of McGraw.

FOR PRESIDENT'S CUP

Sonder Yacht Races Will Be Held off Marblehead

Boston, January 31.—President elect Wilson today notified the international committee that the winners' cup in this year's German-American Sonder yacht races might be presented in his name.

The rules provide that the honorary donor shall be the head of the government in the country where the races are held. The contests will be off Marblehead beginning on August 26. They will be under the auspices of the Eastern Yacht Club, which furnishes the trophy.

The difficulties in Germany which threatened to make the races impossible this year have been overcome and the Kaiserlicher Club will send three boats.

German designers recently claimed that it was not possible to build a sonder-type craft that would have a fair chance against the Americans for $1,435, the cost limit imposed by the emperor. His majesty now has consented to a maximum expense of $1,650.

Red Caps for Hunters

Albany, N. Y., January 31.—Hunters in this state will be required to wear a bright red cap while in pursuit of game if a bill introduced in the legislature today by Assemblyman Doty becomes a law. Soutar And Williams To Play For World's Professional Racket Title And $10,000

WILLIAMS

Philadelphia, Pa.—Professional rackets of a high order will be played in the United States this winter when Jack Soutar, the professional of the Philadelphia Racket club and Charles Williams of England play for the world's championship. The match will be for $10,000 and will be a home and home affair, one half being played in Philadelphia and the other in England. While no date has been set for the match, the first half will probably be played in March.

The outcome of the contest has already provoked lively discussion. Williams is known to be a clever, resourceful player, while Soutar, who belongs to the younger school, developed by George Standing, the former champion, is one of the most promising professional players in the United States. Since he has been in Philadelphia he has improved wonderfully and is thought by many to be the master of Williams. Williams won the title from Jamsetjee the Hindu, in May, 1911.

Peace Conference Tame Affair.

New York, Jan. 31. — Only 35 persons attended the annual meeting of the New York peace society, in the Bible school hall of the Broadway tabernacle. Last year, when the meeting was held at the Hotel Astor, about 400 attended. Robert Underwood Johnson, editor of the Century Magazine, made a strong plea against the exemption of the country's coastwise shipping from Panama canal toll. At the conclusion of Mr. Johnson's speech a resolution was unanimously passed placing the society on record as opposed "to the violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty by the provision of the Panama canal act which remits the tolls on American vessels." Officers were elected and the president, Andrew Carnegie, delivered a speech in which he ridiculed fears of an invasion and criticised increases in the army or navy.

PROTECT TREES FROM RODENTS

Corn Stalks Are Used Successfully to Prevent Ravages of Rabbits

EASILY AND CHEAPLY OBTAINED

Also Fresh Soil Should Be Slightly Mounded Around Bases of Trees and Firmed Well.

As a means of protecting young orchard trees against the ravages of rabbits and groundhogs cornstalks are recommended by F. H. Ballou, in Ohio Experiment Station Bulletin No. 208. He says: "There is practically no cost of material where corn is grown or cornstalks fed. A good plan is to take the bundles as they come from the field before feeding to the stock. Lay the bundle on a low platform or broad, low box, and 'square off' the buts with an ordinary Lightning hay knife. A solid block and a broadax may be made to answer, but the hay knife is much better. Next cut off a two-foot length of the lower ends of the stalks in the same way. These sections may be fed to the stock either in a manger or in the feed-lot, where the blade will be cleanly and neatly stripped off. After a few days' feeding several hundreds or even thousands of these uniform length stalks may be rapidly gathered up and tied in bales for future use.

Cornstalks Used To Protect a Young Tree From Rabbits.

"Five or six stalks bound firmly about the stem of a young tree, with twine or short sections of baling or broom wire, will constitute a protector that will last, not only for one season, but for several, or as long, usually, as the tree needs protection from rabbits. The stalks will readily yield as the stem increases in size. In case wire ties are used for binding on the stalks, great care should be exercised to see that these are removed from about the tree when the stalks are taken off. If not removed, they will drop down about the collar of the tree and become covered with soil and forgotten. Trees have been killed by wire girdling in this way.

"By mounding the bases of the trees slightly with fresh soil and firming it well, a stalk-protected tree is quite secure from all rodent enemies."

SHRINKAGE OF CORN.

The amount of shrinkage with ear corn, the kind that most farmers are interested in, depends much upon the water content and maturity when husked and the rate of shrinkage upon the variety, the maturity of the grain, and the air of humidity.

In an experiment carried on at the Iowa Experiment Station it was found that water in corn varies from as low as 12% in dry corn to as high as 36% in freshly husked corn. Studies were conducted by the Kansas Station with three lots of ear corn, fairly dry when cribbed: one by the Illinois Station with two cribs, each containing 20,000 pounds; one by the Iowa Station with four varieties. The results are given in the following table:

Station—Kansas: Nov. to Dec., ——; Nov. to March, 3.26%; Nov. to April, 6.8%; 1 year 8.62%; 2 years, ——.

Station—Illinois: Nov. to Dec., 2.6%; Nov. to March, 6%; Nov. to April, 17.8%; 1 year, 19.4%; 2 years, 29.6%.

Station—Iowa: Nov. to Dec. 8.34%; Nov. to March, 14%; Nov. to April, 19.26%; 1 year, ——; two years, ——.

An interesting thing to note in connection with the above table is that the greatest shrinkage was in the spring. After this time the loss is very small and slow. When the moisture content falls to 12% it will also be noticed that the shrinkage practically ceases. EARL CHENAULT,

College of Agriculture, Ohio State University.

Fall and winter plowing usually produces a better corn crop than spring plowing, the ground being mellowed by the frost and rain.

OIL MEN GET BUSY.

Price Boosts Stimulate Activity In Three States.

Pittsburg, Jan. 31.—The fourth successive advance in crude oils was recorded when the South Pennsylvania Oil company announced its prices at the opening of business. As on every other day this week the price was lifted 7 cents a barrel, bringing Pennsylvania crude to $2.33 and other grades to the following prices: Mercer Black, Corning and Newcastle $1.86, Cabell $1.93, Somerset $1.32. There was no change in Ragland from 70 cents.

The effect of the advance has been most pronounced in Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, where many leases are being taken up and preparations being made to begin drilling operations without waiting for the appearance of warm weather as is customary.

ANOTHER HOLIDAY PROPOSED

A petition is being prepared and is, perhaps, now before the General Assembly of Ohio asking that body to set aside February 12 as a legal holiday in honor of Abraham Lincoln. Nearly one-half the states in the union have already established a legal holiday on the anniversary of Lincoln's birth.

The petitioners have doubtless based their request on the grounds of patriotism and have appealed to the national pride of the legislators. And in the face of an appeal of that kind those who are opposed to such a move run the risk of being accused of a lack of patriotism and actual discourtesy to the memory of a great man.

Yet The Tribune is willing to run that risk. This national holiday business has come to be a joke. We set aside a day as a national holiday on which we theoretically honor the memory of one of our departed great and then, in practice, go forthwith and get drunk or go to the most convenient prize fight or pay our respects to the dead hero in some manner no more creditable to ourselves or to the memory of the one in whose name the day has been set aside.

We can honor the name of Abraham Lincoln in a better way than to declare a holiday on the anniversary of his birth. We can recall the great achievements of George Washington in a more fitting manner than in knocking off work or getting drunk or having a big dinner or in any of the other ways commonly used to celebrate these national occasions.

To be sure, Washington's birthday is already a holiday and perhaps it would be best to let it remain such for all time to come. But even the most enthusiastic boosters for the Lincoln holiday must admit that some time the line will have to be drawn. Some time we will run out of days, so long will the list of our immortal worthies have become, in an effort to honor their memories.

And the question naturally arises, how do those who are so anxious for these new holidays, celebrate them when they come around? Are these people so full of veneration for the departed great, so overflowing with patriotism that they have to have a special day set aside on which to open wide the throttle of civic virtue and let the surplus steam of patriotism blow off for an entire twenty-four hours?

Can't the revered memory of Abraham Lincoln be best celebrated by walking as near as we can in the paths he trod for 365 days in the year, instead of devoting one to a questionable celebration in his honor? Wouldn't Abraham Lincoln's memory be perpetuated in a better way if our people today voted and talked and worked as he would vote and talk and work for cleaner civic and political conditions, if he were alive?

If people are asking for more holidays as a matter of rest and recreation, then we have an entirely different proposition to consider. A Saturday half holiday, or the entire Saturday of each week would be a more feasible plan. But it certainly is no credit to a man's motives to appeal to the patriotism of the people of Ohio for another legal holiday and conceal the real reasons for his request behind the name of the greatest of American citizens.

RESTAURANT PROFITS

A writer in the New York Sun, supposedly steward of a large restaurant, has some illuminating facts for those who are disturbed by the increase in restaurant prices. He says that on every dish the successful restaurateur sells he makes from 75 to 300 per cent. Restaurant prices are not gauged by cost of service; instead of an expense, service is an item of revenue.

Going over the menu with his reader, he begins with hors d'oeuvres. For 60 cents the diner may get a "special individual portion." This consists of one stalk of celery stuffed with roquefort cheese, two square inches of toast with a segment of sardine, two small slices of head cheese, half a boiled egg sprinkled with caviar and half a baby tomato stuffed with sliced apple and mayonnaise. "As steward," says the writer, "I know that this dish does not cost 20 cents. My employers sells it at 60 cents, making 200 per cent profit."

For six Blue Point oysters the charge is 30 cents, they cost the steward 6 cents. For six Cape Cods the charge is 35 cents; they cost 8 cents. For six Lynnhavens, larger oysters, the charge is 40 cents; the cost, including ice, is not more than 10 cents. A favorite dish at this restaurant is chicken soup a la creole. Individual portions are served for 30 cents; they cost the restaurant 9 cents. "If the cost of that soup was averaging 10 cents," says the writer, "I should watch the kitchen for waste." Profits on fish are tremendous. Then this is said of meats:

> We make big profits on our meat, too. I see to it that our prices for roasts and entrees are rising continually. Our system is to add 5 cents to the price of different dishes, one at a time, and lay it to the increasing cost of living.

But in the service the restaurateur finds the easiest "velvet." He pays nothing for help that can "sponge" off the patrons. For instance, the cab starter pays several hundred dollars for the "privilege" of opening cab doors; but he makes money in tips. Once cabs of all companies stood in front; now one big taxicab company pays thousands for the exclusive right, the contract providing that the house detectives keep rival cabs out of the street in proximity of the restaurant. The cloak and washroom graft is leased to a company that hires sad-eyed boys. The lease costs this company $6,000 a year. It only cost $4,000 until the restaurateur learned the company had formed a trust and operated all the cloak rooms in the big restaurants. The company made its profits in the tips it took away from the sad-eyed boys.

Of course, the head waiter makes money. He pays for his job, but he gets handsome returns. The humble waiters pay nothing for their places; neither are they paid anything. They are supposed to get $1 a day, but are regularly fined $1 daily for breakage. And yet they, too, make money—and all out of the easy public.—Indianapolis News.

HOBOES DRAW LINE.

Object to Manner in Which Some States Enforce Vagrancy Laws.

New Orleans, Jan. 31.—Unless some states cease what they term too active enforcement of vagrancy laws members of the National Organization of Hobos will adopt militant suffrage methods—raise disturbances in jails and otherwise make themselves so obnoxious that they will be freed.

This was the stand taken at the national hobo convention in resolutions which drew a distinct line between "bums who won't work" and "respectable hobos who can't get work."

It was aiming to protect the hoboes against the "bums" that James Eads How introduced a resolution condemning the manner of enforcing vagrancy laws in California, Illinois, Missouri, Georgia, Texas, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Less than 200 hoboes are at this convention, largely because of activities of police in this and nearby states, who have many of the "delegates" in jail on vagrancy charges.

Copies of the resolution were ordered sent to legislatures of each state named.

FIRE FOLLOWS SAFE BLOWING

Chicago Yeggmen Bind Watchman and Work at Leisure.

Chicago, Jan. 31.—Four cracksmen entered the office of Moeller & Company, general merchandise, bound and gagged Michael Roser, the watchman, blew open the safe and escaped with $1,260.

Three hours after their departure fire broke out in the store and practically destroyed it, with a loss of $75,000.

Police believe the fire was caused by the ignition of the blankets the robbers had put around the safe to deaden the noise of the explosion. The police learned of the robbery from Roser. The watchman, left lying tied on the floor when the robbers departed, struggled two hours to free himself. Succeeding in getting his arms loose he telephoned to the police.

AMBASSADORS GET BUSY.

Hope to Prevent Resumption of Hostilities In the Balkans.

London, Jan. 31.—Although the representatives of the Balkan allies served notice that hostilities against Turkey will be resumed Monday, hope existed among the foreign ambassadors that further warfare might be averted.

M. Paul Cambon, the French ambassador to England, pointed out that the Turkish note is moderately worded and leaves the way clear for further negotiations, which would probably result in more concessions from the porte to the allies.

"We fervently hope to be able to avert further fighting in the Balkans," said M. Cambon. This made it plain that the ambassadors were considering every method of forestalling the hostilities the allies have promised to precipitate.

The Turkish peace envoys who have been recalled by the porte are leaving one of their number behind in London. This was considered significant in view of the fact that the allies are doing the same thing.

Delegates Ordered Home.

Constantinople, Jan. 31.—The sublime porte ordered the Turkish delegates to the London peace conference to return forthwith to Constantinople. The summary withdrawal of the Ottoman envoys, while Bulgaria, Servia, Montenegro and Greece agreed each to leave one representative in London is taken as an act of retaliation for the hurried denunciation of the armistice by the allies.

Would Change National Anthem.

Washington, Jan. 31.—A joint resolution to make the "Star Spangled Banner" the official anthem of the United States was introduced by Representative Levy of New York. It also provides "that whenever the 'Star Spangled Banner' is played on any occasion at any public place where persons belonging to any branch of the government are present they will stand at attention, and all other persons will stand, such positions being retained until the last note of the anthem."

Atlantic Pool Abandoned.

Berlin, Jan. 31.—The conference of representatives of the lines in the North Atlantic steamship trust closed without having been able to induce the new Canadian Pacific line from Montreal to Trieste to join the pool. After the adjournment of the conference, which was secret, a brief announcement was made that the negotiations had failed.

TAFT PRAISES TEACHERS.

Speaks to Delegation of Methodist Sunday School Delegates.

Washington, Jan. 31. — President Taft gave high praise to the work of the Sunday school teacher and student in an address before the delegates to the Sunday School convention of the Methodist Episcopal church South, whom he received in the east room of the White House.

"Every organization of this sort, organized to strengthen the influence of the church," he said, "is one that as president of the United States I feel that it is my duty in every way to encourage."

The president praised the improvements in Sunday schools, the more thorough and modern methods of teaching.

"I don't know any church that is more militant in its progress than the Methodist church," he said, "and therefore I feel confidence in speaking to you of the improvement that has been made in Sunday school education."

SOCIAL LINES OBLITERATED.

Women of All Classes Urge Passage of Peters Measure.

Washington, Jan. 31. — Prominent society leaders and sociologists joined girls from factories in urging the house committee on labor to report favorably the Peters bill, prohibiting employers to permit women to work more than eight hours a day in the District of Columbia. The Peters bill is said to be a model law for the protection of women who work for a living. It is intended to apply only to the city of Washington and its supporters insist that if it is enacted the states will pass similar legislation. Among those who appeared before the committee to advocate the Peters bill were Mrs. Florence Kelly, author and social worker; Miss Maud Younger of California; Mrs. Poindexter, wife of the senator from Washington; Miss Constance Leup, who is well known in Washington society; Mrs. Richard Wainwright, Samuel Gompers and many others.

A living exhibit of labor conditions that obtain in Washington was presented to the committee. It was a woman 26 years old who had worked in a laundry for 13 years. She told of going to work at $1.50 a week when 13 years old and having been advanced to a wage of $7.50 a week, working beside men and doing the same work for which they received $12 and $15 a week.

Miss Younger, a prominent social worker in San Francisco, told how laundry girls fainted from joy when the eight-hour woman's work bill was passed in California.

DEPUTY ON TRIAL.

Sheriff Harburger's Aid Charged With White Slave Deal.

New York, Jan. 31.—Frank Filastro, the wine merchant of Mott street, who with Joseph Ribuffe of Paterson, N. J., is being prosecuted by the federal authorities on a white slavery charge, is one of Sheriff Julius Harburger's special deputies.

The federal authorities have good reason to believe that Filastro is the acknowledged head of the Camorrist society, having succeeded to that position after the activities of Lieutenant Petrosino had led to the deportation of the former chieftain, Alfano, and eventually to the murder of the detective himself.

The trial of the two Italians, which began before Judge Hand in United States district court, was a duplicate in miniature of the courtroom scenes at Viterbo during the Camorrist prosecution. The most dramatic incident in the trial occurred when Annie Greco, the government's most important witness, entered the courtroom to take the stand. A hissing sound drew her attention to the part of the courtroom whence it came. Whatever she saw there made her cry out in terror and fall back fainting into the arms of a court attendant. It was some time before the Greco girl was able to take the stand and tell how she had been taken by Filastro from this city to Paterson, where she was placed in a disorderly house on Straight street, in which Filastro is said to have at least a part interest.

Highwaymen Get Rich Loot.

Cincinnati, O., Jan. 31.—Highwaymen held up and robbed an American Express wagon on Florence road and obtained $1,060 in cash, money orders amounting to $6,000 and checks for $2,000. Herbert Foster, the driver, states that the highwaymen had led his team into a hollow, securing the loot, cut the reins and then departed.

Lawyer Meck Fined.

Bucyrus, O., Jan. 31.—Judge Henderson of Kenton fined Benjamin Meck, a prominent attorney, $400 on a charge of attempting to influence William Schwenck, prosecuting attorney. He overruled a petition for a new trial and gave Meck 60 days, under $500 bond, to file his appeal.

What YOUR Farm Needs MOST

Let us give you a copy of the Great Western Manure Spreader Catalog. Read how much barnyard manure means to your soil, your crops, your profits. Learn a lesson from the run-down farms you know about—land from which crops have taken all the producing power. How long will your land be rich unless you put back what the crops take out?

Spread manure! Not with a pitchfork, because doing it with a fork does more harm than good—use a

Great Western Spreader

The Great Western has an all oak frame, double oak bolsters, oak pole, oak axle caps, oak hounds, oak bed stakes, oak yoke head and oak cross pieces. It has hickory single trees, hickory double trees and hickory neck yoke. The frame cannot be twisted out of shape, no parts can bind—hence it is the lightest draft spreader made. The GREAT WESTERN endless apron runs on 75 large rollers—one set on each side of the heavy oak frame and one set supporting the center. These large rollers are set close together so there's no sagging or waving of the apron slats. The Great Western has a big 15-inch indestructible malleable fifth wheel that weighs 40 pounds. This is attached with malleable braces to two big, heavy, solid oak bolsters. It is arranged so that if one wheel drops into a hole or rut, there's no strain or binding on the frame. The Great Western malleable fifth wheel and heavy oak bolsters are set back two feet under the box so the load is evenly balanced on all four wheels. The front wheels of the Great Western track with the rear wheels.

Ready For You NOW

Come and see this wonderful machine. Let us prove how it increases your crops $4 to $8 per acre—why it is better than any other spreader built—why it is guaranteed 50% stronger, 50% more durable, 50% less breakage, 50% better in every way than any other spreader in the world. Come in this week—tomorrow if you possibly can.

We still have on our floor a few heaters--coal or gas on which we have placed special prices. If still in need of a heater it will pay you to see them.

Our line of ranges are also specially priced,

Mrs. Barner Surprised

Mr. C. B. Smith's Sunday school class of Grace church planned and carried out a complete surprise party on Mrs. W. H. Barner Friday evening. The Barner family will soon leave for their new home in Binghamton, N. Y. During their years of residence in Coshocton they have made many friends and their departure from the city meets with general regret. Both Mr. and Mrs. Barner have been faithful and efficient members of Grace church and they will be missed in every department of the church work. As a token of their appreciation of Mrs. Barner's co-operation in the work of the class the members of Mr. Smith's class presented her with a handsome table cloth and napkins last evening.

When Mr. and Mrs. Barner came to Coshocton they came at once into the church and made themselves useful there—and it is to be expected that they will prove equally as faithful to the new church home which awaits them in Binghamton.

Last evening a general all round good time was enjoyed by the members of the class and a delicious lunch served during the hours. The guest list for the evening included: Mrs. John McNary, Mrs. Charles King, Mrs. L. B. Piper, Mrs. Jennie Ralston, Mrs. W. A. Thompson, Mrs. Charles Carpenter, Mrs. H. E. Cox, Mrs. J. H. TRAINED TEACHERS OR NO CERTIFICATES

All school teachers in the state of Ohio will be required to have at least six weeks of training in a normal school before they can be granted certificates, if a bill, introduced in the legislature Friday by Representative Hoaglin, chairman of the house committee on schools, becomes a law.

The bill provides that after 1913, no one shall be given a certificate to teach unless he has had one year's experience in teaching, or is a graduate of an accredited high school or its equivalent and six weeks' training in a normal school. After 1914 he must have had 12 weeks' training in a normal school, and after 1915 an entire year of normal school training. One of his other bills provides for a state school survey and the other, which he puts in by request, provides for agricultural instruction in all first-class high schools.

"MUTT & JEFF"

Looking down the line of past productions of cartoon plays, there is one name that looms up as the producer of practically all the successful ones. It's no secret! Gus Hill, has picked all of the winners in that particular class of plays "Mutt and Jeff," although still young, has the record over all of them. This has been a season of a great number of successful productions, New York has a dozen hits, unfortunately there are so many that the patronage is not sufficient to make all of the deserving ones pay. This did not prove the case when "Mutt and Jeff" was at the Grand Opera House or the Manhattan Opera House, New York, where it walked away with the record business of the year. Among so many "Mutt and Jeff" just simply loomed up as the one conspicuous success and caught the popular fancy, along with most of the loose change.

"Mutt and Jeff" with the entire family of singers, dancers and fun-makers, comes to the 6th st theatre Tuesday February 4. It's the one deserving musical comedy success of the season.

THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE

One of the most striking figures seen on the English stage in recent years is the Drain Man, the elemental and primitive being in "The Servant in the House," the sensationally successful play by Charles Rann Kennedy, which is to be presented at the Sixth St. Theatre on Feb. 13th, by Victor E. Lambert and one of the most perfectly balanced acting organizations now extant in this country.

The Drain-Man is an out-cast who has been cast off by his brother, an English clergyman, and who sinks lower and lower in the social scale until he becomes a scavanger. He is a victim of ingratitude of the world, a creature who has been kicked and buffeted about so much that there has grown in his heart a fierce hatred of the world and those who people it. He is almost a giant in stature a great hulking, shaggy man with eyes that blaze with bitter resentment and a voice that sounds like the roar of some mighty animal.

He enters the house of his brother with black passion in his heart intent upon finding his little girl whom the same brother has kept from him. Before he sees his brother he meets with Manson, the mysterious servant, who is also his own blood brother, but who is keeping his identity secret that he may influence for good those in the house who are in need of help.

The mysterious servant, transforms the Drain-Man into a useful member of society and implants in his heart the spark of brotherly love. He teaches him the glory of labor and shows him that the cleaning up of drains is a necessary occupation. In the end the Drain Man finds genuine pride in his task and glories in the thought of his usefulness.

Clarence Moore of Zanesville was in the city on business Friday.

AT THE SIXTH STREET THEATRE TONIGHT

TABERNACLE IS SCENE OF RIOT

Women Smash Doors in Rush to Hear Billy Sunday.

Columbus, O., Jan 31.—Pushing, mauling, kicking, hustling, fussing and fuming, 20,000 women tried to fight their way into the Billy Sunday tabernacle after the doors were closed for the afternoon meeting, advertised for women only. They beat upon the doors, they screamed, they yelled, they fainted, revived and fainted again. They put aside all those attributes that commonly clothe the sex—they were a fighting, howling mob, an inferno of femininity, a crowd of 'Bashi Bazoukesses.'

Hatpins flashed, were driven home in pressing elbows, furs were ripped from heaving shoulders and trampled in the mud, hats snatched off and flung wide of the crowd. A London suffraget demonstration was as a Chautauqua salute. Meanwhile 13,000 were crowded inside the building, occupying every available seat, hundreds squatted in the sawdust, preempted even the pulpit and huddled under the choir platform where, if they couldn't see, they could at least hear.

When the tabernacle filled and the doors were closed and locked the outside mob became desperate. Surging around the northwest entrance, in Park street they finally succeeded in breaking down the doors and more than 1,000 half mad women rushed the opening.

The 10 police on duty and the force of ushers were entirely unable to stem the tide. They were almost trampled underfoot, and a hurry call was sent to police station for reinforcements. Women who had succeeded in breaking through, resembling a herd of bleating sheep, ran down the tabernacle aisles at full speed.

EXPECT HARD FIGHT.

Friends of Nine Men Verdict Bill Fear Action In House.

Columbus, O. Jan. 31.—The progressives in the house are expecting a hard fight over the nine-men civil jury verdict bill which passed the senate by 31 to 2 after a warm debate. They feel confident of its final passage. In the senate T. C. Jung of Cincinnati made a futile effort to require a 10-men verdict. Only Becket, Lloyd, Broadstone and Gallagher voted with him. Only Broadstone and Seward voted against the bill on final passage.

The supplementary bills authorizing five men verdicts in justice and municipal courts passed unanimously. The bills, all sponsored by Senator Frieboln apply only to civil suits.

The senate passed other bills as follows.

To require instructions on the ballot as to how many candidates are to be voted for by Bernstein; to allow cities to license electrical contractors, by Groetzinger; to let village councils fill vacancies in the office of village clerk, by Howard.

The bill providing for the standardization of such wares of the state as in the opinion of the members of the board created by it, ought not to be permitted to reproduce, was introduced in the legislature today by Representative Cowan of Putnam county. It provides for a state board of examiners of feeble-minded, criminal and defective persons, to consist of five members, three to be appointed by the governor and the other two to be the secretary of the state board of health and the secretary of the state board of charities. The three appointive members of the board are to consist of one surgeon, a neurologist and a practicing physician. They are to be paid $5 a day each for time in actual service.

The Kennedy house bill giving the state banking department supervision over private banks is expected to have easy sledding in the senate. If passed the house along with the following bills

To close polls in all parts of the state at 5:30 p. m.; to make election day a half-holiday; to make it a misdemeanor to drive an auto when drunk; to give members of village school boards up to $20 a year salary; to make it a misdemeanor to advertise fraudulently; to appropriate $62,809 to pay for constitutional amendments advertising.

Fight Compulsory Contributions.

Columbus, O., Jan. 31.—Employers from all sections of the state swooped down upon Governor Cox and the general assembly to enter protest against certain phases of the Green workmen's compulsory compensation act. To the labor committee of the senate they voiced those protests through chosen spokesmen. The two chief objections are the compulsory feature and the provision requiring the employer to contribute the entire amount of the state insurance fund, instead of 90 per cent, as at present.

I. & R. Defeated.

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 31.—The initiative and referendum was defeated in the Kansas house of representatives. The measure received but 70 votes, 86 short of the two-thirds necessary to carry.

T. T. ANSBERRY

Ohio Congressman Seriously Ill at Home In Washington.

Representative T. T. Ansberry of the Thirteenth, Ohio district is ill at his home in Washington city. His condition is such as to cause much grave concern to his family and friends. Last fall, while campaigning in Maine, Representative Ansberry was forced to undergo an operation to remove an abscess from his stomach. It is said that the wound has never healed properly and is now the cause of a serious condition. The physicians state that it will be at least a month and possibly longer before he will be able to resume his official duties. Efforts have been made to keep Mr. Ansberry's illness secret, but the facts have become known.

"THE STOLEN SINGER"

By Martha Bellinger

In the sick-room a screen shaded the light from the bed, which had been pulled out almost into the middle of the room. Near the bed was a table with bottles, glasses, a covered pitcher, and on the floor an oxygen tank. Doctor Thayer's massive figure was in the shadow close to the bed, and Aleck Van Camp leaned over the curved footboard. James lay on his pillow, a ghost of a man, still as death itself. As Agatha grew accustomed to the light, she saw that his eyes were closed, the lips under the ragged beard were drawn and slightly parted; his forehead was the pallid forehead of death-in-life. Neither the doctor nor Aleck moved or turned their gaze from the bed as Agatha and Mrs. Stoddard entered. The air was still, and the profound silence without was as a mighty reservoir for the silence within.

Agatha stood by the footboard beside Aleck, while Mrs. Stoddard, getting a warm freestone from the invisible Mr. Hand in the hall, placed it beneath the bedclothes. Aleck Van Camp dropped his head, covering his face with his hands. Agatha, watching, by and by saw a change come over the sick man's face. She held her breath, it seemed for untold minutes, while Doctor Thayer reached his hand to the patient's heart and leaned over to observe more closely his face.

"See!" she whispered to Aleck, touching his shoulder lightly, "he is looking at us." When Aleck looked up James was indeed looking at them with large, serious, half-focussed eyes. It was as if he were coming back from another world where the laws of vision were different, and he was only partially adjusted to the present conditions. He moved his hands feebly under the bedclothes, where they were being warmed by the freestone, and then tried to moisten his lips. Agatha took a glass of water from the table, looked about for a napkin, but, seeing none, wet the tips of her fingers and placed them gently over James' lips. His eyes followed her at first, but closed for an instant as she came near. When they opened again, they looked more natural. As he felt the comfort of the water on his lips, his features relaxed, and a look of recognition illumined his face. His eyes moved from Agatha to Aleck, who was now bending over him, and back to Agatha. The look was a salute, happy and peaceful. Then his eyes closed again.

For an hour Agatha and Aleck kept their watch, almost fearing to breathe. Doctor Thayer worked, gave quiet orders, tested the heartbeats, let no movement or symptom go unnoticed. For a time James kept even the doctor in doubt whether he was slipping into the Great Unknown or into a deep and convalescent sleep. By the end of the hour, however, Jimsy had decided for natural sleep, urged thereto, perhaps, by that unseen playwright who had decreed another time for curtain; or perhaps he was kept by Doctor Thayer's professional persuasions, in defiance of the prompter's signal. However the case, the heart slowly but surely began to take up its job like an honest force-pump, the face began to lose its death-like pallor, the breathing became more nearly normal. Doctor Thayer, with Mrs. Stoddard quiet and efficient at his elbow, worked and tested and worked again, and finally sat moveless for some minutes, watch in hand, counting the pulsations of James' heart. At the end of the time he laid the hand carefully back under the clothes, put his watch in his pocket, and finally got up and looked around the room.

Mrs. Stoddard was pouring something into a measuring glass. Agatha was standing by the window, looking out into the blue night; and Aleck could be seen through the half-open door, pacing up and down the hall. Doctor Thayer turned to his sister.

"Give him his medicine on the half-hour, and then you go to bed. That man Hand will do now." Then he went to the door and addressed Aleck. "Well, Mr. Van Camp, unless something unexpected turns up, I think your cousin will live to jump overboard again."

Offhand as the words were, there was unmistakable satisfaction, happiness, even triumph in his voice, and he returned Aleck's hand-clasp with a vise-like grip. His masculinity ignored Agatha, or pretended to; but she had followed him to the door. As the old man clasped hands with Aleck, he heard behind him a deep, "O Doctor!" The next instant Agatha's arms were around his neck, and the back of his bald head was pressed against something that could only have been a cheek. Surprising as this was, the doctor did not stampede; but by the time he had got clear of Aleck and had reached up his hand to find the cheek, it was gone, and the arms, too. Susan Stoddard somehow got mixed up in the general Te Deum in the hall, and for the first time, now that the fight was over, allowed her feminine feelings—that is, a few tears—to come to the surface.

Aleck, however, went to pieces, gone down in that species of mental collapse by which deliberate, judicial men become reckless, and strong men become weak. He stepped softly back into the bed-room and leaned again over the curved footboard, his face quite miserable. He went nearer, and held his ear down close to the bed clothes, to hear for himself the regular beating of the heart. Slowly he convinced himself that the doctor's words might possibly be true, at least. He turned to Hand, who had come in and was adjusting the shades, and asked him: "Do you believe he's asleep?" in the tone of one who demands an oath.

"Oh, yes, sir; he's sleeping nicely, Mr. Van Camp. I saw the change the moment I came in."

Aleck still hesitated to leave, fearful, apparently, lest he might take the blessed sleep away with him. As he stood by the bed, a low but distinct whistle sounded outside, then, after a moment's interval, was repeated. Aleck lifted his head at the first signal, took another look at James and one at Hand, then light as a cat he darted from the room and down the stairs, leaving the house through one of the tall windows in the parlor. Mr. Chamberlain was standing near the lilac bushes, his big figure outlined dimly in the darkness.

"Shut up!" Aleck whispered fiercely, as he ran toward him. "He's just got to sleep, Chamberlain; gone to sleep, like a baby. Don't make an infernal racket!"

"Oh, I didn't know. Didn't mean to make a racket," began Chamberlain, when Aleck plumped into him and shook him by the shoulders.

"He's asleep—like a baby!" he reiterated. And Chamberlain, wise comrade, took Aleck by the arm and tramped him off over the hill to settle his nerves. They walked for an hour arm in arm over the road that lay like a gray ribbon before them in the night, winding up slantwise along the rugged country.

Dawn was awake on the hills a mile away, and by and by Aleck found tongue to tell the story of the night, which was good for him. He talked fast and unevenly, and even extravagantly. Chamberlain listened and loved his friend in a sympathy that spoke for itself, though his words were commonplace enough. By the time they had circled the five-mile road and were near the house again, Aleck was something like himself, though still unusually excited. Chamberlain mentioned casually that Miss Reynier had been anxious about him, and that all his friends at the big hotel had worried. Finally, he, Chamberlain, had set out for the old red house, thinking he could possibly be of service; in any case glad to be near his friend.

"And, by the way," Chamberlain added, "you may be interested to hear that accidentally I got on the track of that beggar who ate the hermit's eggs. Took a tramp this morning, and found him held up at a kind of sailor's inn, waiting for money. Grouchy old party; no wonder his men shipped him."

Aleck at first took but feeble interest in Chamberlain's discoveries; he was still far from being his precise, judicial self. He let Chamberlain talk on, scarcely noticing what he said, until suddenly the identity of the man whom Chamberlain was describing came home to him. Agatha's story flashed back in his memory. He stopped short in his tracks, halting his companion with a stretched-out forefinger.

"Look here, Chamberlain," he said, "I've been half loony and didn't take in what you said. If that's the owner or proprietor of the Jeanne D'Arc—a man known as Monsieur Chatelard, French accent, blond, above medium size, prominent white teeth—we want him right away. He kidnaped Miss Redmond in New York, and I shouldn't wonder if he kidnaped old Jim and stole the yacht besides. He's a bad one."

Mr. Chamberlain had the air of humoring a lunatic. "Well, what's to be done? Is it a case for the law? Is there any evidence to be had?"

"Law! Evidence!" cried Aleck. "I should think so. You go to Big Simon, Chamberlain, and find out who's sheriff, and we'll get a warrant and run him down. Heavens! A man like that would sell his mother!"

Chamberlain looked frankly skeptical, and would not budge until Aleck had related every circumstance that he knew about Agatha's involuntary flight from New York. He was all for going to the red house and investigating Agatha herself, but Aleck refused to let him do that.

"She's worn out and gone to bed; you can't see her. But it's straight, you take my word. We must catch that scoundrel and bring him here for identification—to be sure there's no mistake. And if it is he, it'll be hot enough for him."

Chamberlain doubted whether it was the same man, and put up objections seriatim to each proposition of Aleck's, but finally accepted them all. He made a point, however, of going on his quest alone.

"You go back to the red house and go to bed, and I'll round up Eggs. I think I know how the trick can be done."

Aleck was stubborn about accompanying Chamberlain, but the Englishman plainly wouldn't have it. He told Aleck he could do it better alone, and led him by the arm back to the old red house, where the kitchen door stood hospitably open. Sallie was at work in her pantry. The kettle was singing on the stove, and the milk had already come from a neighbor's dairy.

Sallie's temper may not have been ideal, but at least she was not of those who are grouchy before breakfast. She served Aleck and Chamberlain in the kitchen with homely skill, giving them both a wholesome and pleasant morning after their night of gloom.

"You can't do anything right all day if you start behindhand," she replied when Aleck remarked upon her early rising. "Besides I was up last night more than once, watching for Miss Redmond. The young man's sleeping nicely, she says."

She went cheerfully about her kitchen work, giving the men her best, womanlike, and asking nothing in return, not even attention. They took her service gratefully, however, and there was enough of Eve in Sallie to know it.

"By the way, Chamberlain," said Aleck, "we must get a telegram off to the family in Lynn." He wrote out the address and shoved it across Sallie's red kitchen tablecloth. "And tell them not to think of coming!" adjured Aleck. "We don't want any more of a swarry here than we've got now." Chamberlain undertook to send the message; and since he had contracted to catch the criminal of the Jeanne D'Arc, he was eager to be off on his hunt.

"Good-by, old man. You go to bed and get a good sleep. I'll stop at the hotel and leave word for Miss Reynier. And you stay here, so I'll know where you are. I may want to find you quick, if I land that bloomin' beggar."

"Thanks," said Aleck weakly. "I'll turn in for an hour or so, if Sallie can find me a bed."

Mr. Chamberlain made several notes on an envelope which he pulled from his pocket, gravely thanked Sallie for her breakfast and lifted his hat to her when he departed. Aleck dropped into a chair and was stupidly staring at the stove when Sallie returned from a journey to the pump in the yard.

"You'll like to take a little rest, Mr. Van Camp," she said, "and I know just the place where you'll not hear a sound from anywhere—if you don't mind there not being a carpet. I'll go up right away and show you the room before I knead out my bread." So she conducted Aleck to a big, clean attic under the rafters, remote and quiet. He was exhausted, not from lack of sleep—he had often borne many hours of wakefulness and hard work without turning a hair—but from the jarring of a live nerve throughout the night of anxiety. The past, and the relationships of youth and kindred were sacred to him, and his pain had overshadowed, for the hour at least, even the newer claims of his love for Melanie Reynier.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Spirit of the Ancient Wood.

Agatha's first thought on awakening late in the forenoon, was the memory of Sallie Kingsbury coaxing her to bed and tucking her in, in the purple light of the early morning. She remembered the attention with pleasure and gratitude, as another blessing added to the greater one of James Hambleton's turn toward recovery. Sallie's act was mute testimony that Agatha was, in truth, heir to Hercules Thayer's estate, spiritual and material.

She summoned Lizzie, and while she was dressing, laid out directions for the day. During her short stay in Ilion, Lizzie had been diligent enough in gathering items of information, but nevertheless she had remained oblivious of any impending crisis during the night. Her pompadour was marcelled as accurately as if she were expecting a morning call from Mr. Straker. No rustlings of the wings of the Angel of Death had disturbed her sleep. In fact, Lizzie would have winked knowingly if his visit had been announced to her. Her sophistication had banished such superstitions. She noticed, however, that Agatha's candles had burned to their sockets, and inquired if Miss Redmond had been wakeful.

"Mr. Hambleton was very ill. Everybody in the house was up till near morning," replied Agatha rather tartly.

"Oh, what a pity! Could I have done anything? I never heard a sound," cried Lizzie effusively.

"No, there was nothing you could have done," said Agatha.

"It's very bad for your voice, Miss Redmond, staying up all night," went on Lizzie solicitously. "You're quite pale this morning. And with your western tour ahead of you!"

Agatha let these adjurations go unanswered. It occurred to Lizzie that possibly she had allied herself with a mistress who was foolish enough to ruin her public career by private follies, such as worrying about sick people. Heaven, in Lizzie's eyes, was the glare of publicity; and since she was unable to shine in it herself, she loved to be attached to somebody who could. Her fidelity was based on Agatha's celebrity as a singer. She would have preferred serving an actress who was all the rage, but considered a popular singer, who paid liberally, as the next best thing.

AUTO HAS NOT YET DISPLACED HORSE ON FARM

Washington, Jan. 30—The introduction of the automobile on the farms of the United States has not displaced the horse or mule, for the latest estimate of the number of these animals on farms January 1 this year, announced by the Department of Agriculture, shows more horses than ever before, except in 1909 and 1910, and more mules than in any other year on record.

Horses and mules were of greater value than ever before, except in 1911. The number of horses increased 58,000 over last year and mules increased 24,000.

While the number of beasts of burden on the farm increased, the number of food animals decreased. Milch cows decreased 202,000 since January 1, 1912, other cattle decreased 1,239,000, sheep decreased 880,000 and swine decreased 4,232,000.

In average value per head compared with 1912, horses increased $1.83, mules $3.80, milch cows $5.62, other cattle, $5.16, sheep 48 cents, swine $1.86.

In total value the increases were: Horses, $105,528,000; mules $121,588,000; milch cows $107,369,000; other cattle, $159,581,000; sheep $21,600,000; swine, $79,781,000.

The total value of all farm animals increased $493,456,000 or 9.9 per cent over 1912.

Advises Tar and Feathers for Preacher

Washington, Jan. 30—Asserting that the white preacher who performed the ceremony ought to be tarred and feathered and put into exile and expressing his sorrow that the laws of any state could make possible such a marriage, Representative Rodenberry of Georgia, delivered a speech in the house today in enunciation of the marriage of George F. Thompson, a 42-year-old negro of Chicago, and Helene Hanson, a 15-year-old white girl, which took place at Niles, Mich., several days ago.

SIX-YEAR-TERM FOR PRESIDENT

Washington, Jan. 30—Final action on the resolution proposing a six-year presidential term to be submitted as a constitutional amendment to the states, will be taken in the senate before adjournment. The Works resolution, which has been pending for several months, has been made a special order of business. It is believed that the measure will have a strong majority in its favor. The proposed amendment, if ratified by two-thirds of the states would become effective after the end of President Wilson's present term.

FARMERS ADVISED TO TEST ALL SEED CORN

Columbus, Jan. 31.—"What's the use of having boys' corn clubs and corn contests throughout the state if we are to be always confronted with a dearth of competent corn judges?"

This is the question that is being answered by the development of fully fifty young men as judges of corn at the winter short course of the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, under the direction of Prof. George Livingston. Following experiments in the germination of seed corn on hand at the college, a regular exhibit of ears of corn, arranged in the several classes usually found in a corn show, has been prepared. The student have been thoroughly instructed in the points to be taken into consideration in the selection of seed corn for Ohio farms, and are rapidly gaining ability to discriminate between possible unfertile and germinable seed.

"We are making this work just as practicable as possible," said Prof. Livingston. "The lack of a standard score card for corn judging has often been remarked upon in the state corn shows, but under our plan, the idea is to secure only ears that we know will grow. After all, the germinability of the corn is the really important part of corn growing, as no matter how high an ear may score in regularity of its structure, if the germination test shows it to be of low vitality, there is not going to be a successful yield from such seed."

In line with this desire to increase interest in germination tests, the agronomy department has arranged to install individual germination boxes, one for each student taking the work in grain development. These boxes, which might well be put into application on any farm, are about two inches in depth, and are filled with sand which is kept in a moistened condition. Seed taken from ears that appear well developed are planted in this sand and the conditions kept as nearly normal as possible for corn growing until the percentage of germinable seeds is calculated at the end of five or six days. This movement alone, it is believed, will result in the substantial increasing of corn yields on farms where the germination box is given a trial.

PROFITS FROM 21 STORES GO TO THE CHURCH

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 31—One-tenth of his earnings has been the regular contribution of H. Z. Duke to the church ever since his first nickel store was established in Texas and began to grow until there are now twenty-one stores in the chain, and he has a fortune estimated at $500,000 in other holdings.

Not content with a literal obeyance of the Biblical injunction as to tithes, Duke has announced that he will hereafter operate his stores purely for the benefit of the church and its work and that not another penny will he lay up.

Duke, who went to Texas years ago, is here visiting relatives. In announcing that beginning tomorrow all profits of his twenty-one stores will be given to religion, he said:

"I increased by gifts to the church as I prospered, and I believe those gifts are the secret of my success.

"At last I decided I had earned enough and told my wife so. She agreed with me that when I had $500,000 we would endeavor to accumulate no more, but would turn over the profits of my twenty-one stores to the church. I reached the mark last year, and from now on the proceeds of my stores go to the work of the Lord."

MAN AND WIFE PREFER DEATH TO SEPARATION

Paris, Jan. 31.—A double tragedy was caused here today by a doctor's order that a man and wife would have to be separated because the woman was suffering from an incurable spinal disease.

The sick woman, Madame Paul Carriere was told last night that she must go to a public hospital. Her husband then sent their children to spend the night with an uncle.

When the children left their parents were distracted with grief and the wife expressed the wish to die rather than be away from her husband. This morning both were found dead in their home, the woman strangled by her husband and the man hanging dead in a door way.

OPERATORS SEEK MAN TO LEAD HOUSE FIGHT

Columbus, O., Jan. 31—Ohio coal operators, fighting the Green bill requiring miners to be paid for all the marketable coal they produce, are casting about for someone to lead their fight in the house, where the bill will have an able champion in Percy Tetlow a Columbiana county miner. A lawyer in Salem, in Tetlow's county, has written Stephen M. Young of the Cuyahoga county delegation, offering him "the distinction of leading the fight on the bill."

All Information

The lawyer is a college mate and fraternity brother of Young, and writes him as a friend offering a big opportunity.

"If you should decide to lead the fight," the letter states, "you will be supplied with all the information you could possibly need, as many assistants as you might need in preparing your speeches could even be written for you if you so desire.

Governor Against It?

"Powerful democrats are and will be fighting for this bill. Gov. Cox is. I have reason to believe, now fighting the bill in an indirect way.

"C. L. Cassingham, a wealthy Cleveland man, and quite a power in democratic circles there, is president of the central Ohio operators association, and is, of course, fighting the bill 'tooth and nail.'"

KANSAS SENATE OUSTS SOCIALIST

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 31—The Kansas State Senate today unseated its only Socialist member, Fred Stanton of Crawford county, by a vote of 28 to 10 in favor of E. E. Porter, Republican. Evidence presented to the Elections Committee tended to show that men crossed the line from Missouri to vote for Stanton; that there were errors in the count, and that scores of aliens voted.
